

Skip the SAT, Save Thousands on Tuition, and Get a Truly International Education

The SAT is a standardized test that is required for admission to many colleges and universities in the United States. However, there are a growing number of schools that are now test-optional, meaning that they do not require applicants to submit SAT scores. This is good news for students who are looking to save money on tuition and who want to have more options for international education.

How much can you save by skipping the SAT?

The average cost of taking the SAT is $100. If you take the SAT twice, which is common, the cost is $200. If you apply to 10 colleges, the cost of sending your SAT scores to each school is $1,000. So, by skipping the SAT, you can save up to $1,200.

In addition to the direct costs of taking the SAT, there are also indirect costs, such as the cost of test prep courses and the time you spend studying for the test. These indirect costs can add up to hundreds of dollars, if not more.

What are the benefits of skipping the SAT?

There are several benefits to skipping the SAT, including:

- You can save money on tuition. As we mentioned above, skipping the SAT can save you up to $1,200. This money can be used to pay for other expenses, such as tuition, books, or living expenses.
- You can have more options for international education. Many colleges and universities abroad do not require SAT scores for admission. This means that you have more options for where you can study, and you can find a school that is a good fit for your needs and interests.
- You can reduce stress. The SAT is a stressful test, and it can take a lot of time and effort to prepare for it. By skipping the SAT, you can reduce stress and focus on other things, such as your studies or extracurricular activities.

How can you skip the SAT?

There are two ways to skip the SAT:

1. Apply to test-optional schools. There are a growing number of colleges and universities that are test-optional, meaning that they do not require applicants to submit SAT scores. To find test-optional schools, you can use the College Board's College Search tool.

2. Get a waiver. If you cannot apply to test-optional schools, you may be able to get a waiver from the SAT. Waivers are available for students who have financial hardship, a disability, or other circumstances that make it difficult to take the SAT.

Is skipping the SAT right for you?

Skipping the SAT is not right for everyone. If you are a strong student with a high GPA and good extracurricular activities, you may be able to improve your chances of admission by submitting SAT scores. However, if you are not a strong student or if you are looking to save money, skipping the SAT may be a good option for you.

The SAT is not a requirement for a good education. There are many colleges and universities that do not require SAT scores for admission, and there are many ways to get a good education without taking the SAT. If you are looking to save money on tuition and have more options for international education, skipping the SAT may be a good option for you.
